Biographical Register of Officers and Graduates

OF THE

U. S. MILITARY ACADEMY AT WEST POINT,

FROM ITS ESTABLISHMENT, MARCH 16, 1802, TO THE ARMY REORGANIZATION OF 1866-67.

By BREVET MAJOR-GENERAL GEORGE W. CULLUM,

Colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

(This BIOGRAPHICAL REGISTER comprises the États de Service of all graduates from the establishment of the Military Academy, in 1802, to 1867, inclusive, giving their promotions, stations, commands, war records, and civil services when they have left the army; a complete register of the officers of the institution, with their histories; a full list of the military posts of the United States, present and past; an alphabetical table of all battles, combats, sieges, actions, and skirmishes, in which graduates have participated; besides much other useful and statistical information, showing from whence graduates were appointed cadets, to what arms promoted, the casualties of service, their rebellion record, and civil occupations after leaving the army. The work, containing some 2,300 biographies, is published in two large octavo volumes of nearly 700 pages each, and printed from entirely new type, on fine paper, being in amount of matter equal to about five or six ordinary octavo volumes. The subscription price is $10 in cloth binding, or $14 in half morocco, for the entire work.)

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES, }
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1868. }

MY DEAR GENERAL—I have received your "Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the United States Military Academy," which you have done me the honor to forward for my acceptance. The work ought to show to the enemies of the Military Academy, that if they expect to harm the institution in the minds of the American people, they must keep from their view the services rendered to the country by its graduates. Your book will receive the favor of all graduates, except, perhaps, hereafter, from those who see recorded against them, "Joined in the Rebellion of 1861-66, against the United States." This ought to be odious.

With great respect, your obedient servant.

U. S. GRANT, General.

From Lieut.-General W. T. Sherman.

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF THE MISSOURI, }
St. Louis, February 15, 1868. }

DEAR GENERAL—I have received your kind note of February 11th, with the two volumes of the Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy, for which I have waited long. I believe I appreciate the vast amount of care and labor you have bestowed on this work, and feel certain you will be well rewarded for it in the thanks of the tens of thousands of families who will pore over these volumes to find therein recorded the brief histories of their friends. I have read your preface, and can hardly credit the fact that any intelligent man will now question the use and necessity of a military education. Men who profess the law, medicine, machinery, or the arts, must first acquire a professional education. How much more necessary with us who hold in our hands the lives of so many people, and the honor and good name of the country itself?

I also observe that you meet an objection by some people in the early part of our civil war, when the minds of all were aroused, excited, and apt to run astray. None of us contend that because we graduated at West Point, we are the less men, with all the passions and weaknesses of other men, liable to err, and even to crime: but the facts and figures given by you are conclusive on this point, that in the great heaving cause that shook our national fabric, a less proportion of our graduates were blinded and misled than of Senators and Representatives in Congress, of Judges of the Supreme Court, or of the colleges located in the most rigidly patriotic spots of our country—Yale and Harvard.

I do not think we claim that West Point can in four years accomplish miracles and utterly remould the character of its pupils, but it has in the past and will make in the future, men more useful in the details of life, more reliable and faithful to their trusts, whether private or public, and more national in their attributes and aspirations, than any other system of education hitherto tried; and these results are cheaply attained by our national Military Academy.

While there is such unlimited freedom to the expression of public opinion as in our country, we must expect the widest criticism and the wildest views; but my observation convinces me that at no former period of our history was the Academy more firmly rooted in the respect and good opinion of our people than now, and I have no fears but that it will always receive the generous and fostering care of the Government.

In the course of my service I have been thrown most intimately with volunteer officers who had not received the advantage of the West Point course; but all, without exception, regretted that they had not enjoyed, in early life, the minute and systematic instruction in the elements of the military profession, which they realized were better taught at West Point than at any other institution of our country.

Instead of learning the same things with the aid of books, they had to learn them in camp, sometimes at the expense of valuable lives.

Knowing the intense interest you take in this subject, I assure you of my ardent sympathy and best wishes for your entire success.

With great respect,

W. T. SHERMAN, Lieutenant-General.

From Major-General George H. Thomas.

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 17, 1868.

MY DEAR GENERAL—I yesterday received, per Adams' Express, the copy of the Register of the Officers and Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy, which you were so kind as to send me, for which I beg you to accept my sincere thanks.

Aside from its value to the graduates of the Military Academy, as containing a condensed and reliable summary of their military and civil history after graduating, it must be a source of just pride to them to see there recorded indisputable evidence of as much loyalty among the alumni of our Alma Mater as can be met with among any other class of American citizens.

I venture unhesitatingly to say, also, that no other institution of learning in the country has contributed more to the advancement of science and literature than the Military Academy at West Point.

I am, very truly yours,

GEO. H. THOMAS, Major-General U. S. A.

From a distinguished Officer of Volunteers.

MY DEAR GENERAL—In acknowledging a copy of your Register to-day received, I take the liberty to say how much curious instruction and pleasure I have found in a cursory examination of its most laborious details. I am reminded of the expressive, stern silence of the vacant place on the wall, once occupied by the picture of Marino Faliero among the Doges of Venice, when I look at your short final record of such graduates as Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee. It seems to me very felicitous to leave them and all their barren honors without a word of mention, when they severed their connection with an institution which has been the splendid muse—praesidium et decus—of National Life and Loyalty. It is grand.

Your preface meets my warm sympathy. As a volunteer it was my lot to serve under, with, and over graduates of West Point. I felt the great delicacy of commanding men bred to "le metier des armes" without offending their self-love or my own. And it is a pleasant memory to me that my warmest friendships were with regulars, graduates chiefly; and I have often said that I was, in every duty, perfectly sure of the true, loyal, and whole-souled service of those men who knew so much better than myself whether my orders were correct enough to justify the ready and energetic support which, in every instance of my experience in service, I received. My gratitude to these gallant men is glad to find even this private expression. I honored and felt for them; and my grateful esteem for them all—those who taught me much and those who delicately concealed how much they could teach me, that I ought in my position to know—has left me with a most fraternal love for many individuals, and the highest regard and respect for the Military Academy as a faithful, essential bulwark of our safety.

From a Graduate of Harvard College.

GENERAL— . . . Although a stranger, permit me to express the obligations which every citizen should feel for this most valuable and important contribution to the history of the nation; and its preparation must have involved a much greater amount of labor than you even are willing to allow.

The defence of West Point in your introduction will be of great value, and yet it is rather melancholy to think that any word of defence is needed, when the whole country, and even our heavens, are covered with monuments of its scientific attainments and achievements, and while the paths of the dead are but too thickly strewn with those other sad monuments which speak of patriotism, heroism, and faithful endeavor.

But your pages have a record of the living, which must endear the Academy to the hearts and understanding of all this generation—if we except ambitious declaimers and political demagogues; and for the service which you have done to the body politic, you will excuse me if I take the liberty of thus expressing my grateful acknowledgments.

From the North American Review.

GENERAL CULLUM has finally published his long-expected Revised Register of West Point Graduates. It is a book indispensable to every one who studies the military history or establishment of the Republic; but its keenest interest is for those who are its subject. It gives concisely, but fully and accurately, the leading events in the life of each graduate, from the opening of the Academy to the reorganization of the army, in 1866; and the simple record of efforts, triumphs, and tragedies is the more affecting to the survivors from the close ties with which the Academy has bound together the Regular Army. An esprit de corps, unknown to any other college in the country, is created by the very nature and regulations of the institution. Cadets just emerging from boyhood are separated from their homes and from the world for four years. For amends, they are bound together by constant intercourse and a systematic emulation in studies, arts, exercises, and amusements. They are in constant and familiar association with localities and scenes famous in Cadet tradition for the deeds of their predecessors, to which their own exploits are to be added,—both forming through their lives an exhaustless theme for the night watches in the steaming jungles of the Everglades or the icy mountains of Oregon. And to whatever post an officer may go, he will be welcomed by those who know him intimately, at least by reputation, and with whom he has a thousand common interests. Isolation magnifies trifles; and in the little absolute despotism of West Point, party spirit runs high, and for ten years before the war, the Cadets took sides in their violent political disputes, almost to a man, as they were afterwards divided, in life or in death, on the hard-fought battle-fields of the great Rebellion; and as then, after the dispute, Cadets would quietly fall in and march to mess to discuss over their hash the performance of their horses at cavalry drill, so, during the war, on our side at least, after the prisoners were brought in, it was no rare sight to find a Rebel as much at home in the camp of some former room-mate or comrade, as though for the time every principle of the "little unpleasantness" was forgotten, and the dingy Rebel gray was transformed, and represented to their eyes nothing but the old spruce uniform, more familiar to them both than any other.

This freemasonry seems an obnoxious exclusiveness to some unreasonable opponents who ignore its advantages. It is probably one of the causes of the violent and unjust attacks to which the Academy is so often subject. The Preface of General Cullum's Register gives and suggests facts which should disarm such assailants, and which are invaluable for the defence made by its friends, and for candid inquirers after the truth.

In the first years of the late war, many undeserved reproaches were thrown out against the Academy for failing to accomplish impossibilities, and the country seemed ignorant of the familiar principle, of which General Cullum here reminds us, that for great commanders, ability, knowledge, and experience—all three—are essential. In 1861 there was no military experience in the country at all proportioned to the necessary scale of operations; there was, no doubt, more military ability among the men whose tastes had impelled them to seek West Point, than among the same number in civil life; and military knowledge was confined to the Regular Army and to the graduates. Under these circumstances, it would seem to have been clear where our leaders should have been sought exclusively at the outset. The assembled wisdom of the nation thought differently, and it is an instructive study to compare the places held by political generals in the Union Army early in the war with the results they had accomplished at its close. General Cullum, with the modesty of a veteran, does not refer to this; but the Army Register for 1866 shows, that, of the seventeen general officers of the Regular Army at the end of the war, all but one were graduates of West Point; and without detracting from General Terry's glory, it is just to say that his promotion was rather due to the enthusiasm for one valuable victory than for well-established generalship, and that this victory was of the straightforward sort that depends more on the body of troops than on their head.

But war, if an expensive, is also a thorough school, and the knowledge and experience gained in the Rebellion were so great in proportion, that they were rapidly destroying the advantage in these respects before held by regularly educated soldiers; and by the end of the war, leaders, whether Volunteer or Regular, were fast falling into the places their ability entitled them to.

It is true many West Point commanders failed, even where this was not due to their supporters or to circumstances. This is only allowing that all did not possess the three requisites that have been mentioned. But it must be remembered that the Confederacy advanced its West Point graduates much more systematically than we did, and that many a defeat for the Union was still a success, though on the wrong side, for West Point.

This leads us to speak of the loyalty of West Point graduates. It is a common notion that they were under peculiar obligations to the United States Government. This mistake is well exposed by General Cullum, who argues unanswerably that they were educated by the country for its benefit, and not for their own; and that the event has proved the economy of the Academy, even in dollars and cents. This is clear from a view which the author only hints at. Every Cadet is enlisted to serve four years after graduating. In these four years, most of them—all those in staff corps—have responsibilities and perform duties that in commercial life would command pay enough higher than they receive to amply compensate for the cost of their education. It is difficult to see that the crime of a Southern graduate, in rebelling, is any greater than that of any other government official.

But are we not assuming a little too much in taking the disloyalty of West Point for granted? One of the saddest experiences of the war was the observation of the deep-seated, firm conviction in the minds of many of the most high-minded, religious Southern men and women, and growing from their first consciousness in the minds of their children, that their cause was a righteous one, and that they were resisting an unholy war of invasion; one of the pleasantest sights in a general view, but without much comfort for our side, immediate or future, was that of the active, cordial sympathy of the Southern women with the men, even more general and efficient than with us. The question was not brought home to us, and it is hard for us to form an idea of the strength and suffering required for a kindly, right-minded man to give up the dearest ties of earth for a point of abstract morality enveloped in a thick cloud of casuistry, and to become a reproach and an outcast in the land of his fathers. If those who failed in this test deserve censure, certainly those who stood it deserve no common praise, and in reference to these, General Cullum gives us facts and figures of which West Point may well be proud. He says:

"It is unfortunately true that many forgot the flag under which they were educated, to follow false gods. But who were the leaders of this treason, but the honored and trusted in the land, filling, or who had filled, the highest places in the government, — Senators, Representatives, Members of the Cabinet, Foreign Ministers, Judges of United States Courts, and even those who had been elected by the people to fill the highest offices in their gift? Was it then a greater crime for graduates of our national Academy to forsake their country than for the highest officials in every branch of the government, executive, legislative, and judicial, who, from the seceding States, almost to a man, joined the Rebel standard?"

"But let us examine this Rebellion Record a little more closely. In the executive department four presidents were living when secession began. Of these, the only Southerner joined the Rebels; another did the country more harm than an avowed enemy; while the others, certainly, were not over-demonstrative in their efforts to preserve the Union. Belonging to the bench of the Supreme Court there were four Southern Judges, of whom two remained loyal, one was strongly sympathetic with the South, and one joined the Rebels. The Southern Judges of the United States District Courts sided with their own people. Of the Senators in Congress from the seceding States, but one, and of the House of Representatives, but three, remained loyal. Nearly all the agents of the State, Treasury, Interior, and Post-Office Departments, residing in or from the seceding States, espoused the Rebel cause. . . . Of those appointed in the army from civil life, nearly one half, while but a little over one fifth of the West Point officers left the service and joined in the Rebellion. . . .

"The statistics show that the West Point part of the army has been by far the most loyal branch of the public service; that nearly four fifths of its graduate officers remained faithful; that one half of those from the South stood firm by the stars and stripes; and in the battles for the Union, that one fifth of those engaged laid down their lives, more than one third, and probably one half, were wounded, and the survivors can point with manly pride to their services here recorded for the preservation of the nation."

With these facts stated, the Academy needs no eulogy, and can securely rest her honor on her loyal children, and her efficiency on her turbulent children as well.

The book in respect to taste and execution is admirable. It does not stoop to preserve the fame of misdirected valor, and the only notice of the most eminent Rebels after leaving our service, as though when they lost their honor they had lost their lives with it, is, that they "joined in the Rebellion of 1861-66, against the United States," with the date and place of their death, when known. The labor of compilation and correction was immense; the arrangement is singularly convenient, systematic, and happy; and the result is a new honor in peace to its author, already so distinguished in war, and a new illustration of the claims of the institution he defends.

From the New York Herald.

"After many years of persevering toil," says the author, "I present to my brother graduates of the Military Academy, this record of their services, honorable to themselves, giving world renown to their Alma Mater, and claiming for their country a place in the first rank of military nations."

This work will not be considered by the public in the light in which its author modestly regards it, as having its chief interest in the circle of the graduates from the Military Academy. It is a contribution to the history of the country, and just now will be more especially regarded as a contribution to the history of the war. It is hardly possible to over estimate its value in this regard. It contains, well digested in cyclopædic form, a vast amount of information of a kind always difficult to obtain, inasmuch as it is in so great a degree personal. It comprises in its two volumes of over six hundred pages each, "The Etats de Service" of all graduates from the establishment of the Military Academy, in 1802 to the present time; a complete register of the officers of the institution, with their histories; a full list of the military posts of the United States, present and past; an alphabetical table of all battles, combats, actions, &c., in which graduates have participated; besides much other useful and statistical information.

And these "Etats de Service," 2,500 in number, though not biographies in the ordinary sense of the term, nevertheless contain the prominent facts of each individual's military or public life. They are the protracted creations of a lifetime, and do not come in the category of the numerous easily-written narrations and so-called histories of the events of our great civil war, with which the press teems, and, moreover, they demand habits of mind, intellectual qualifications, and tastes which are rarely combined.

When, however, such a work does at rare intervals appear, it at once becomes a necessity. No historian can write, no student can read or study his country's history without it, while to libraries, public and private, it becomes a sine qua non. Nor would any one who has become acquainted with the character of this work and feels interest in the civil or military career of any one of the Academy's graduates, or would have a remembrance of the events of our various struggles with foreign powers or of those of that momentous one for our national existence, willingly be without these volumes.

The preface to the work sets forth in brief the importance of military education. It seems strange that it could be necessary to argue such a point, that we could expect individuals or nations to excel in the most difficult of all arts without the study and practice which every other art, or science, or calling demands for its perfect exercise.

Yet we cannot ignore the fact that there are those who depreciate military education, and by the phrase "heaven-born generals," would understand men who, from the bar or the plough, pass at once to the successful command of armies. Such anomalies are never presented. Cromwell, indeed, had little education of any kind when he entered public life, but it required years of the stern teachings of actual warfare to make him the great soldier he became. Great soldier as he was, he became yet greater as a statesman, and that, too, in the same school of actual practice in the art of statesmanship. The arguments against education would in his case be as strong, therefore, as applied to its use for making statesmen, as soldiers.

Many, however, admit the necessity of military education while denouncing the Military Academy as a means to that end.

Against the aspersions of such it is the feature of General Cullum's work that it furnishes so rich materials for its vindication. To showing how the Academy has been not only the means of giving us an accomplished body of officers for our army, but also of raising the standard of scientific education in all the colleges of the land, and of stimulating the development of works of civil engineering and internal improvements, by furnishing the country with able civil engineers, a portion of the preface is devoted; and we think his statements, founded as they are upon the carefully collected facts which the book records, must be convincing to all who are not prejudiced beyond the power of truth to convince.

The author is not less earnest and full in dealing with charges of "disloyalty." He proves that the most loyal branch of the public service, when looked at as a whole, was that mainly constituted by the Academy and its graduates.

In the brief space we can devote to the subject, we can but indicate its main features, and express our conviction of the conscientious fidelity with which the author has elaborated his work, and of the peculiar value of that work to the country, which should be the more grateful to the author, since gratitude must be taken by him in part payment, for the sale of such books seems necessarily restricted.

From the Boston Watchman and Reflector.

These two volumes of thirteen hundred pages are a monument of General Cullum's reverence for his Alma Mater, and of the patient industry with which he has ransacked archives, examined tons of manuscripts, and written thousands of letters to collect and condense the summaries of the services of the graduates of the Military Academy. The work contains the "Statistics relating to the Graduates," a record of the "Battles and Combats fought by the United States Armies since the establishment of the Academy;" a list of the "Forts, Arsenals, and Military Posts of the United States;" a "Register of the Officers of the Academy," of their "Services and Promotions," and a "Register of the Graduates" from its establishment until 1867. The accuracy and completeness of the work will render it serviceable to the historian, while its brief but frequent narration of services will serve to correct the prejudice against the Academy which so strangely exists. While one half of the officers appointed in the army from civil life joined the rebellion, but a little over one fifth of the West Point graduates deserted their flag to serve in the ranks of secession. One half of the officers appointed from the South adhered to the Union; one fifth of all those graduates engaged in the war laid down their lives, one half were wounded, and the survivors may answer hostile criticism of their Alma Mater by pointing with manly pride to the services recorded in these volumes. General Cullum says that "the entire cost of educating the whole of the seceding graduates, in money, was not more than was saved by the military knowledge of its (West Point's) loyal graduates on every day of the rebellion."

THE BEECHES, Monday, March 9, 1868.

I should do injustice to my own sense of its value, and to the extraordinary pains General Cullum has taken in its preparation, if I did not notice, in what terms of favor I could, the Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the United States Military Academy. In my opinion, no more valuable material for history exists in this country. The triennial catalogues of our colleges utterly fail in that for which they might be made of incalculable value. This is in showing what the graduates of colleges have done. They do show when a graduate has become a clergyman, and when one got an A. M., D. D., or LL. D.; but this shows very little of what they really are, and nothing of what they have done. Men get D. D.'s and LL. D.'s often when they have done very little to deserve them. An LL. D., in its true sense, is a distinction for great learning, but when our colleges give such a degree to a man for fighting battles, it is just as if West Point conferred D. D.'s for the same thing. Even the universities of England have got to giving learned titles just as the German princes confer the title of Baron, market ouvert. For this reason the catalogues of colleges, like the West Point Register, should tell what the graduates have done, what they have lived for, what they have shown to justify a liberal education.

In this respect, Gen. Cullum's Register of West Point is invaluable. If any one has got anything to say against West Point, let him take up that Register, and say it, but say it with this roll of hard work, of honorable service, and of great performance before him. I undertake to say that, taking the average of their years and opportunities into view, the 2,200 graduates of West Point have done more solid work than any equal number of any profession.

Some persons may say that the work for which they are educated is an evil work; that war is an enormous evil. Grant it; but military men do not make war. Wars are made by merchants and politicians. The East India Company (a company of merchants) made more wars and caused more bloodshed than any equal number of officers and soldiers on the face of the earth. And more than half of modern wars have been caused by what is called aggression on commerce. And even the professed ministers of the church, the brilliant priests who figured as the statesmen of the middle ages, and of Bourbons and Stuarts, made more wars than any generals of the army. War is not the desire, but to conduct war is the business of educated soldiers. As long as avarice and ambition make war a business among mankind, there must be men educated to it. That needs no argument.

A graver charge has been made against West Point, that it is immoral and irreligious. The latest edition of this charge is in a letter, professedly from some unledged cadet to a paper in Chicago, and subsequently quoted in Congress. Now, suppose this was actually true, is it not equally true of every college in the land? It is a high compliment to West Point to expect its young men to be perfect when it is not expected of any college in the country. I undertake to say, without fear of contradiction, that there is more restraint and less temptation to dissipation at West Point than there is at Harvard, Yale, or Princeton. What restraint is there at Harvard or Yale to prevent dissipation or immorality among young men to any extent? Would it be difficult to find Harvard students in gross dissipation? Would it be difficult to find Yale students where the laws of the college forbid them to go? On the other hand, it is barely possible for the cadets at West Point to escape at night and engage in some immorality. This is possible, but it is not common and it is not easy. The whole establishment and grounds belong to the Government; the discipline is strict and most rigidly enforced, and the outward temptations small. The public services of religion are properly attended to, and there is a cadet's prayer meeting once a week for those who are religiously inclined. The chaplain stands to West Point in the same relation that the Professor of Moral Philosophy and Ethics does to the colleges. He could do something more if he was entirely relieved (as he ought to be) from the duties of a professorship. I knew a chaplain at West Point to do something I have not seen the professors in colleges do. The corps of cadets were drawn up at sunrise each morning of the spring, in a hollow square, and in the centre of that square the pious and amiable chaplain knelt down on the yet wet grass and offered up worship and service to the living God. I am not aware that the chaplains of colleges do much better than that. But there is in some things an air of religion about colleges not seen at West Point. Why? Mainly because a large number of young men go to colleges for the express purpose of being educated for the ministry; and, of course, there are a large number there who are more rigid and earnest in religious duties.

One great wrong has crept into West Point, which is in imitation of college practices, called hazing. I am told it is nearly done away with. Any institution will lose by permitting that practice. For the older cadets or students to impose upon the young and inexperienced, is mean and dishonorable. It is contrary to the whole spirit of chivalry, which aims to be just, generous, and magnanimous. The weak and innocent are the objects of its care, and to persecute them is alike cruel and dishonorable.

I intended only to notice the Register; but I can only state some general facts. The first cadet, Joseph G. Swift, was graduated in 1802, and after being engaged in various services, civil and military, died in 1865, at the age of 82. The whole number of graduates, from 1802 to 1867, inclusive, was 2,218. In that sixty-five years this country had but nine years of real war, and in those nine years 183 were killed in battle. I think that will be thought a large proportion. But it is not half the deaths caused by these wars, for there is the long list of those who died of disease or wounds caused by those campaigns. Let us take one class as an example. The class of 1841 had fifty-two graduates. Of these twenty-five are dead. Fourteen were killed in battle and ten died in service. Forty-three—more than four fifths—were engaged in battles. The first one on the class list was engaged in thirteen important battles; the next in twelve; the fifth, having served at Bull Run and Chancellorsville, died of wounds; the tenth was killed at the battle of Molino del Rey; the eleventh (Lyon) was killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek; the twelfth was killed near Cherubusco, Mexico; the thirteenth died at Vera Cruz; the sixteenth was killed at the battle of Stone River; the twenty-second died near Corinth, Miss., in the army pursuing Beauregard; the twenty-third (Brannan) was engaged in fifteen battles; the twenty-sixth (Reynolds) was killed at Gettysburg; the thirty-third died of wounds received at Molino del Rey; the thirty-eighth died of wounds received at Sharpsburg; the thirty-ninth was killed at Spottsylvania; the forty-eighth was killed at Chepultepec; the fiftieth died of wounds at Mexico; the fifty-second died of wounds at Mexico. This class had sixteen generals, of whom Lyon, Reynolds, Wright, Tower, and Brannan were a part; two were killed in the rebel service—the Garnetts.

I have taken this class as an example, to show both what services were rendered by the graduates of West Point, and what admirable materials for history are here. No man can write history of any value without a most exact reference to events and dates; nor can the history of the United States, in the last sixty years, be written well without consulting very closely the records of West Point.

History is the record of what is done, and not the babbling of orators, or the verbiage of literature. I say, therefore, the Register of West Point, prepared by General Cullum, is a most invaluable memoir for history. It ought to have been a government work. But our government is a curious affair in some of its workings. Look at the enormous sums it spends to pay Gales & Seaton for various sorts of works; look at the thousands it has paid for biographies of Senators, for books, and this, that, and the other thing—none of which had the tenth part of the value of this register. But let that pass. Human justice is the frailest of virtues. It always follows in the wake of human selfishness, and if you have not the arts of flattery and importunity, in vain will you appeal to government for an iota of justice or a particle of consideration.

I hope at some time to give some brief notice of men whom I have known in my time, and whom these pages partly commemorate. They are to me pages of memories—sad, almost painful to look upon; yet, of such is our life composed, and, as time goes on, this volume of memory grows larger and sadder.

A VETERAN OBSERVER.

From the Army and Navy Journal.

For the last six years, in the press, on the platform, in Congress, all possible changes have been rung on what is called the "disloyalty" of the Military Academy at West Point. This charge, utterly groundless, thoroughly ungrateful, and base in its ingratitude, was connected, of course, with the very natural fact that the best generals of the South (like the best generals of the North) received their military education at the national school of arms. As often as repeated, so often the slander has been repelled with indignant vehemence. And yet, with such persistency is the venomous charge reiterated, that, we presume, half the people in the North, even among the friends and admirers of the Academy, naturally conjecture that there is something in it. As for the accusation itself, it has been partly urged in malice, partly by jealousy, but chiefly, let us hope, through complete ignorance of the facts.

Thanks to General Cullum (whose admirable "Biographical Register," a ten-years' labor, is such a monument of industry, fidelity, knowledge, and skill, as can only be found among those literary products where the love of the work overtops any possible reward the result can furnish), we have now the exact facts and figures to refute the libel upon our national school, and we trust that, in justice, we shall never again, not even when the annual appropriation is to be made in Congress, hear of the "disloyalty" of West Point. We will first present the figures, and then some brief comments.

From this careful and elaborate work it appears that, at the outbreak of the Rebellion, 1,245 graduates of the Academy were supposed to be living, 820 being still in the Army, and 425 in civil life. Of the 820 in the Army, only 184, or only about a fifth, joined in the Rebellion, while 626, or nearly four fifths, remained true to the Union—10 taking neither side. Of the 425 in the civil life, but 99, or less than one fourth, were known to have joined the Rebels, while 280, or nearly three times the latter number, remained loyal. The careers of 44 were unknown; but the proportion remains, doubtless, as already indicated. In fine, of the 1,245 graduates of the Academy living at the outbreak of the Rebellion, less than one fourth joined in the Rebellion, and over three fourths were true to the Union. And this is the record on which is raised the cry of "disloyalty!"

When, in addition, we find from General Cullum's tables that of the 280 loyal graduates in civil life, 110 re-entered the service, though half of them were beyond the meridian of life, and that of the remaining 170, all under 45 years old, became officers of the Regular or Volunteer Armies, except 39, who, from disability and other causes, did not take an "active part;" when we find that of all the loyal sons of West Point who served in the Rebellion, a greater proportion than one in three were wounded in battle, and one in five (an astonishing record) laid down their lives in the same sacred cause, surely there should be an end to the cry of "disloyalty."

So much for the absolute "disloyalty" of this "hot-bed of treason," this "nest of secession," as fervid stump orators are sometimes pleased to style our Military Academy. Now let us look at its relative "disloyalty"—its "disloyalty," we mean, compared with that of Congress, of such colleges as that at Cambridge, and of the country itself. For, if West Point be a hot-bed of disloyalty, then are Cambridge, Congress, and the country forcing-houses of treason more fruitful yet. We are assured by good authorities that of the Southern graduates of Cambridge, residing still at the South at the time of the Rebellion, not one tenth espoused the cause of the Union, much less entered its military service. Even in the border States they went for or against the Union, in accordance with the general sentiment of their sections. We have heard more than one Harvard graduate of a dozen years ago aver that, after reading the names of all the distinctively Southern students in his own and contiguous classes, he could not remember one who had joined the Northern Army, and all that he knew anything about had joined the military or civil service of the Confederacy.

Now let us turn to Congress. General Cullum declares that of the Senate but one member from the States that seceded remained loyal, and of the House but three—and they from a border State. All the rest, scores in number, went with the Confederacy. General Cullum further well says that even "the Southern United States District judges sided with their own people," as did "nearly all the Southern agents of the State, Treasury, Interior, and Post-Office Departments;" of the four living Presidents themselves, "the only Southerner joined the Rebels; another did the country more harm than an avowed enemy; while the others were certainly not over demonstrative in their efforts to preserve the Union." In one word, no position was high or sacred enough to insure the loyalty of its occupant, no oath taken or "favors received" from the United States could retain a tenth part of the Southern people. And as for the whole Republic, it is fresh in remembrance how it was rent in twain, nearly all the South going one way, and nearly all the North the other. Not one Southerner in ten remained loyal.

Now, turning to the Military Academy, what do we find? We find that of 350 graduates born in or appointed from slave territory who were in the military service at the outbreak of the Rebellion, no less than 162 remained loyal, while 168 joined the Rebels. In other words, while in the colleges, in Congress, in the country, loyalty was so rare an exception among Southern men that probably not one in ten exhibited it, one half of the Southern graduates of the Academy remained true to the Union and fought in its behalf. In the face of this record, and of the record of the achievements of the loyal half of the Southern soldiers, headed by Major-General George H. Thomas, of Virginia, compared with the record of Congress, the colleges, and the country, shall we speak hereafter of the "disloyalty" or of the lustrous loyalty of the Academy?

Much praise has been given, and deservedly, to Harvard, to Yale, and to other famous colleges for their devotion to the cause of the Union. Lowell has immortalized that devotion for Harvard in his magnificent ode, and its fame has spread not less in Europe than America. Only the other day a London newspaper said, "Harvard sent her under-graduates, not by ones and twos, but by whole classes, to the front. These buds, the flower and the promise of the North, laid aside their books and took up the musket, many as private soldiers, to fight for the cause which they saw to be so precious. The list of students who fell by wounds or illness is long enough to make a famous bead-roll wherewith to answer those who say that the natural aristocracy of America holds aloof from her destinies." It is nobly and worthily said; but not less devoted, not less loyal, not less heroic in battle, were the children of West Point, and their "bead-roll" of slain is longer and more illustrious. Whereas the Southern sons of Harvard plunged into disunion in a mass, nearly one half of those of West Point remained steadfast to the Union. Have we, then, all praise for one institution, and only the word "disloyal" for the other?

True it is that the Lees and Johnstons and Braggs and Beauregards and Longstreets and most of the famous soldiers of the South were West Point graduates; but lower in rank were Southern Congressmen, holders of the United States offices of honor and trust, and graduates of Northern colleges in greater proportions. It was the excellence of the training furnished to all its pupils, Northern and Southern, that put the cause on both sides completely under West Point control. And for these banes there were antidotes in Grant, Sherman, Thomas, Meade, Halleck, Sheridan, Hancock, and so on through all the grades, from general down. Were it our purpose to go into an estimate of the value of the Academy to the country, we should set forth the splendid array of its great names, and the illustrious catalogue of their victories. But it is enough to show what a weight of "loyalty" it lent to the Union. Harvard's devotion and loyalty are peerless, and we are all proud to reverence them; but if General R. E. Lee was a graduate of West Point, General W. H. F. Lee, his son, was a pupil for two years at Harvard; if West Point sent out Beauregard, Harvard sent out a member of Beauregard's staff. Why is it that we hear imputations of "lessons of treason" imbibed at one place, but only of "lessons of loyalty" imbibed at the other?

More convincing than all other proofs, perhaps, of the unparalleled loyalty of West Point is the fact mentioned by General Cullum, that of the appointees from civil life in the Army, at the beginning of the Rebellion, fully one half joined the fortunes of the Confederacy, while only one fifth, as we have seen, of the West Point graduates in the Army proved disloyal. What do those say to this fact, who are wont to say that but for West Point there would have been no secession? It was the Army officers from civil life who, in such a vastly greater ratio, espoused the cause of the Rebellion. In face of these accumulated proofs of the loyalty of the Military Academy, of the unequalled extent to which it held even its Southern graduates true to the Union, and the conspicuous services it rendered to the country, the voice of detraction should be shamed into silence, and, in a reaction of feeling, the long-deferred honor be given where honor is due.

From the New York Citizen.

General Cullum's work is valuable for two distinct reasons: It is of great use and interest to army men, and it fully vindicates West Point from the foolish charge of being a nursery of treason.

During the early part of the war, a portion of the Northern press became impatient because our armies did not at once achieve crushing victories; and calling to mind the fact that the Southern armies were chiefly led by West Point men, rashly concluded that the West Point element, both in the Rebel and Federal armies, was either hostile or lukewarm to the Union cause. The fact that Lee, Longstreet, Jackson, and the Hills were graduates of the Military Academy, was made so prominent that the people began to believe that the majority of the graduates had joined the rebellion. Long before the war was over, the true state of the case became fully known. The loyalty of the great majority of the West Point men was established beyond controversy, and the fact that the leaders under whom the rebellion was finally crushed were originally educated at the much-sneered-at Military Academy, convinced the people that West Point was not the useless institution which some had hastily proclaimed it.

General Cullum, by the inexorable logic of statistics, shows the falsity of the charges against the loyalty of the West Point officers. Only twenty-three per cent. of the graduates entered the Rebel service. One half of those appointed from Southern States remained loyal, and of the loyal graduates one fifth were killed in defence of the flag under which they were educated, and fully one half were wounded in the same noble cause. These figures need no comment, but prove conclusively that West Point was never, in any sense, a nursery of treason.

Of the admirable manner in which General Cullum has contrived to condense the military and civil history of each of the two thousand two hundred and eighteen graduates into these two volumes, it is not easy to speak too highly. The date of appointment and graduation of each cadet, the date of his several commissions or brevets, the campaigns in which he served, and the places to which he was appointed or detailed for duty, the names and dates of the engagements in which he participated, and in too many instances the record of his death, are given with the utmost brevity consistent with clearness. The author has displayed organizing abilities of a high order in the arrangement of his Register, and a degree of care and industry that reminds one of the elaborate thoroughness which he displayed during the war. * * * * *

The Register will be indispensable to every army man, and to any one who wishes to understand the true worth of the West Point Academy.

General Cullum's Biographical Register embraces some 2,500 military biographies, carefully compiled from the most authentic sources, and are arranged according to the several classes of graduates since the establishment of the institution, in 1802. Among the long roll of graduates, we miss, of course, the names of such volunteer heroes as Logan, Sickles, Farnsworth, Garfield, and others; but in the military biographies of such soldiers as Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and George H. Thomas, of Hooker, Burnside, Meade, and Pope, of Mansfield, Richardson, McPherson, and Howard, of Griffin, McCook, Heintzleman, and Kilpatrick, and in the statistics and tables of battles and other military matters relating to the rebellion, are embraced an interesting and authentic military record of the battles and grand military triumphs of our thousands of volunteer heroes against the common foe.

General Cullum, himself a graduate of West Point, is manifestly a loyal man, and closes the biography of all the rebel graduates in 1860-61, with the pregnant remark in every case: "he joined the rebellion." We are gratified, too, to notice the many evidences in the able preface to the work, of how warmly he feels the charge against West Point as a nursery of treason; nor are we displeased with his eloquent efforts to rebut and disprove the charge. He shows by his statistics that 162 Southern graduates joined the Union forces, and bravely battled against secession and rebellion. These, although cradled and reared in State allegiance, he claims, were rescued from treason by West Point influences, resisting every appeal of relative and friend to swerve them from loyalty and duty, and with all Northern officers (save sixteen, who dishonored their alma mater), and 110 graduates from civil life, who rejoined the military service, bravely fought the good fight for the Union. While one fourth of the officers of the navy on the active list resigned or were dismissed in 1860-61, and, being Southerners, probably joined the rebellion, he shows that nearly four fifths of the West Point graduates remained faithful to their oaths of allegiance; that one half of those from the South stood firm by the stars and stripes; that in the battles of the Union, one fifth of those engaged laid down their lives, and that more than one third, probably one half, were wounded, while the survivors can point with manly pride to their services for the preservation of the nation.

Thus he warmly defends his institution, and asks: Can any other college or seminary of learning in the land—can Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Union, or Princeton—all of whose Southern students en masse joined the rebellion—show a higher record of patriotism or sacrifice?

But in nothing does he deary or attempt to detract from, the merits and services of our gallant volunteers. He praises them highly. After eloquently arguing the importance of a military education from the light furnished by the history of ancient and modern warfare, and the lives of the great captains of ancient and modern times—of Caesar and Hannibal, of Napoleon, Marlborough, and Washington—and showing that knowledge and experience have in all ages been the elements of success, that these can only be obtained either from actual service in the field, at a cost of the blood of thousands, or in seminaries of learning like that of West Point, and that it is far wiser, and certainly more humane, to obtain them through the latter, he concludes his preface with the following eulogy on our volunteer heroes:

"All honor to our patriotic and gallant volunteers who, from the bar, the farm, the counting house, the workshop, and every sphere of life, rushed at the sound of the first hostile gun fired in the rebellion, to their country's defence! Their self-sacrifice in giving up lucrative positions and the comforts of home for the privations of camp, their intelligence in meeting the difficult requirements of their new vocations, their endurance through long marches and weary campaigns, their steadfastness in the darkest hours of disasters, their valor on the battle field or in the deadly assault, their moderation when victory had assured our success, and their return as peaceful citizens to a cordial submission to the laws of their preserved country, are worthy of all commendation. Doubtless none more than they felt and appreciated the great value of military education and experience as essential adjuncts to a natural genius for war in forming the great captain."

From the New York Evening Post.

It is not every year that so valuable a book appears as the "Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the United States Military Academy," edited by General George W. Cullum. Of course, the paramount interest of this book is for those whose names figure on its pages, and for their friends; but it is also an important contribution to the history of the country. General Cullum has been indefatigable in his exertions to make the work accurate and complete.

General Cullum adds that "the entire cost of educating the whole of the seceding graduates, in money, was not more than was saved by the military knowledge of its (West Point's) loyal graduates on every day of the rebellion."

From the New York National Freemason.

This is not a work of brief labor, but of many years of persevering toil. Official and private sources of information have been exhausted to make it accurate and complete. The General truly says: "Archives have been ransacked, tons of manuscript examined, letters by thousands written, and interrogatories almost countless put wherever a hope of gleaming any information at all reliable existed."

The preface is a complete vindication of the West Point Academy from all aspersions. Its reference to the great warrior Masons of the world—Washington, Napoleon, Frederick, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugene, Koseinsko—is flattering to the fraternity.

From its statistical tables we learn that cadets were first appointed in 1802. There were but two, one from Maryland and one from Massachusetts. In civil life there have been 3 members of the cabinet of the United States; 7 ministers to foreign courts; 12 members of Congress; 5 Governors of States; 132 presidents and professors of colleges; 135 presidents, chief engineers, and superintendents of railroads; 75 authors.

There were 70 battles fought in the war of 1812-15 with Great Britain; 166 in the Indian wars; 48 in the war with Mexico; 500 in the recent conflict, in all which the graduates of the Academy participated.

The position of all the forts, arsenals, and military posts is given, and a perfect register of the officers of the Academy from March 16, 1802, to July 1, 1867, making 837 in all—among whom we notice many devoted Freemasons.

Then follows the carefully prepared record of the services and promotions of the officers of the United States Military Academy, making 2,218 in number.

The first graduate, Joseph G. Swift, was born in and appointed from Massachusetts. His military and subsequent career was honorable. General Cullum says of him: "Amiable and sincere, spotless in integrity, staunch in friendship, liberal in charity, General Swift was a model gentleman, a true patriot, and Christian soldier (we add, and consistent Freemason), worthy of the imitation of all who, like him, would live honored and revered, and die universally regretted."

Another craftsman we notice, Jonathan Williams, born in Massachusetts, and appointed from Pennsylvania. During the Revolutionary War he resided in Europe, being the private secretary to his relative, Dr. Franklin (the Master of the first Lodge in Pennsylvania), on his mission to France. Appointed in the army with the rank of major, he assumed the superintendency of the Academy, and accepted various high military and civil positions.

Space fails us even to mention the names of the hundreds of Freemasons, whose memories will be preserved through the means of this elaborate work.

The graduates of West Point, their families and friends, and, indeed, the whole nation, will gratefully remember General Cullum for his patriotic work. No American library, private or public, can be complete without these volumes.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

So much has been said, and falsely said, of the disloyalty of the graduates of West Point, that a few facts gleaned from General Cullum's recently published Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of our Military Academy, will be read with interest. The carefully prepared tables show that of the 1,245 graduates supposed to be living at the beginning of 1861, 99 from civil life and 184 from the army joined in the rebellion, or less than twenty-three per cent. And if two thirds of those whose loyalty or disloyalty is unknown are added, it would still appear that more than three fourths of the graduates remained faithful to the Union.

Of those graduates who were in the military service of the United States during the rebellion, more than one half held volunteer commissions. Of the graduates who served in the battles of the late war, one fifth lost their lives for their country, and more than one third were wounded.

General Cullum is earnest in his defence of the Academy against the charge of disloyalty, and makes some pertinent inquiries, as when he asks why Congress, the Supreme Court, and the colleges are not equally accused of being nurseries of treason; or when he asks whether it is more disreputable to forsake the flag beneath which the graduate has been reared, than to stain the ermine of the Supreme Court with the crime of treason; or when he asks whether the makers of the laws, Southern Senators and Representatives, who trampled the Constitution under foot, were not as guilty when violating their oaths as the graduates of the Military Academy. The General asserts, and we believe he is correct, that the Southern graduates of Northern colleges espoused the Rebel cause almost en masse, while West Point, by the antidote of its loyal teachings, saved one half of its Southern pupils, who, from infancy to manhood, before they entered the Academy, had breathed the poisoned air of secession. These are points to be noticed, and with the author we would do all honor to the noble band of 162 graduates, who, cradled and reared in the atmosphere of State rights, in the hour of trial proved true to their country.

The record published by General Cullum of the military and other important operations of the graduates of West Point, constitutes the best defence of that institution which could have been made. It appears that over 2,200 cadets have graduated from 1802 to and including the class of 1867. Among the names not distinguished in war we observe those of Sylvanus Thayer, long the head of the institution; of Robert P. Parrott, who devised the Parrott gun; of George W. Whistler, the celebrated railroad engineer, lately employed in Russia; and of Alexander D. Bache, one of the ablest representatives of science which this country has produced.

Washington, in his message of December, 1793, against the expressed opinion of Jefferson, recommended what Jefferson called a military academy. "I opposed it," says Jefferson in his diary, "as unconstitutional. Hamilton and Knox approved it without discussion. Randolph was for it, saying that the words of the Constitution authorizing Congress to lay taxes, etc., for the common defence might comprehend it. The President said he would not choose to recommend anything against the Constitution, but if it were doubtful he was so impressed with the necessity of the measure that he would report it to Congress, and let them decide for themselves whether the Constitution authorized it or not. It was therefore left in."

In May, 1794, Congress expressed itself favorably to its Constitutionality. In 1796 Washington again presented the subject to the attention of Congress. But it was not until March, 1802, that West Point was selected for this purpose. Mr. McHenry, the Secretary of War under Adams, had urged the matter so fully and forcibly in his annual report in 1800, that its organization on a limited scale took place. Jefferson, in 1803, waiving his constitutional scruples, proposed an augmentation of the institution and its removal to the then seat of Government, a suggestion which fortunately was not adopted.

It is generally conceded that the great efficiency of West Point is due to the arrangements made during the administration of Mr. Monroe, which extended from March 4, 1817, to March 4, 1825. General Sylvanus Thayer, in July, 1817, then Major, became its Superintendent, after having examined the military schools and establishments of Europe, which he visited on the termination of their great conflict, and was the instrument for carrying into full effect the intentions of the Government. In Major Thayer there was a fortunate union of those qualities which produce severe discipline and afford the requisite scope and breadth to military education. Shortly after Major Thayer's appointment John C. Calhoun became Secretary of War, which position he held until March, 1825.

West Point had contributed to the war of 1812 but few officers of great distinction—General Scott was not a graduate—and as Mr. Calhoun had been in Congress during that struggle, and had a mind peculiarly fitted for organization, his first care on entering the War Department was to unite with Major Thayer to place West Point on the best footing possible to enable the country to wage successful war. Mr. Monroe's administration was the last of those that received their impress from the Revolution. It was composed of statesmen selected not because of any partisan tendencies, but for their supposed great ability and tried patriotism. It is not too much to say, that there was unquestioned purity and fidelity and generally a high tone of honor in all the departments during Mr. Monroe's term, and it is fortunate that West Point received the impression of a new and powerful impulse from that administration. It has been treasured by the Professors—who regard their honor as the brightest jewel—and transmitted to successive classes until it reached the distinguished actors in the last great struggle, in which they conferred renown on the whole country.

If Mr. Calhoun's doctrine of the right of nullification and secession, announced long after his connection with Mr. Monroe's administration, contributed to produce the rebellion, which it unquestionably did, though he claimed that this was not his motive, he had also provided a remedy in elevating West Point into great efficiency. In one of his early reports as Secretary of War he said:

"It ought never to be forgotten that military science in the present condition of the world cannot be neglected with impunity. It has become so complicated and extensive as to require for its acquisition extensive means and much time to be exclusively devoted to it. It can only flourish under the patronage of the Government, and without such patronage it must be almost wholly neglected. A comparatively small sum expended in time of peace to foster and extend the knowledge of military science, will, in the event of war, be highly beneficial to the country, and may be the means of its safety."

The Chief Engineer in 1822 reported "that the Military Academy may be considered as having been in its infancy until about the beginning of 1818, prior to which time there was but little system or regularity;" and he added, that a large portion of the students "have been under the necessity of leaving the Academy without completing their education." The support given to the institution by Mr. Calhoun, and the powerful efforts of Major Thayer, enabled Mr. Calhoun to speak of the institution in December, 1823, as "not inferior to any similar institution in any country."

The Southern tendencies of Mr. Calhoun were indicated even at this early day by a recommendation to establish another institution of like character in the Southern States; but it is fortunate that the recommendation was not adopted, as both would have been more or less sectional, whereas the important fact that a large number of those educated at West Point from the Southern States remained true to the Union—General George H. Thomas is the most signal instance—proves that the influence of the institution was not as unfortunate as has been often alleged.

A curious examiner into the law of compensation will find in the far-seeing circumspection and sagacity of Mr. Calhoun as Secretary of War, and in the policy of nullification and secession to which he was subsequently committed—the good a partial remedy for the evil—much to interest him in weighing and comparing these different measures. Certain it is that it required the exercise of forethought and diligence at this early period to prepare for a war that happened only about thirty-six years after Mr. Monroe's administration had ceased. The term of Mr. Adams, which succeeded, was not favorable for such improvement, as supplies were rigidly withheld and party spirit ran high. Nor was the term of General Jackson favorable for that purpose, as he was an improvised soldier, not especially friendly to West Point, and there were other subjects to engage the attention of his Cabinet, arising from the violence of party action during his whole term.

Reflection will perhaps show us that the organization of West Point, on a basis such as would enable the country to conduct war with the highest skill, could have taken place at no period with such advantage as during the administration of President Monroe, and it is to be regretted that General Cullum, in a work so valuable and likely to be so enduring, should have omitted, in his able preface, to trace to their true cause, so far as external management is concerned, the good results in skill and science, and, what is equally important, in honor and patriotism, among the officers of West Point which the war developed, and which have rendered that institution hereafter safe.

It needed a concurrence in both the excellence of the instruction imparted and the peculiar relation of the students to render the efficiency of the institution complete. The cadets instead of paying are paid, and are the subjects of military rule. While in our colleges there is some yielding on the part of their professors to pecuniary interests, such interests as between professors and cadets in no manner interfere with the efforts made at West Point to render military education complete, and to impress upon it a character of nationality.

THE COST AND PROFIT OF WEST POINT.

General Cullum's Biographical Register of West Point, of which we spoke a few days ago, has some interesting particulars of the services which the West Point Academy has done the country.

The establishment of a military school was one of the hobbies of General Washington. During the war for independence he had learned the practical importance of thorough military education. Congress, in that struggle, was compelled to ask Louis XVI. for engineers; and General Charles Lee said, with his habitual sneer, that there was not an officer in the Continental army who knew "the difference betwixt a cheval-de-frise and a cabbage garden." Every one recognizes the greatness of our debt to Steuben, Kosciusko, and others, who gave us the benefit of their study and training in the European wars. Some of our own officers were, perhaps, a little jealous of their more accomplished comrades of foreign birth, but Washington did not share the feeling; in his last annual message to Congress he forcibly reiterated his conviction that the country should train up a class of such officers taken from among our own youth: "Whatever arguments may be drawn from particular examples, superficially viewed, a thorough examination of the subject will evince that the art of war is both comprehensive and complicated; that it demands much previous study, and that the possession of it in its most improved and perfect state, is always of great moment to the security of a nation. This, therefore ought to be a serious care of every government, and for this purpose an academy, where a regular course of instruction is given, is an obvious experiment which different nations have successfully employed."

The bill for the erection of a Military Academy of the United States, was reported to the House of Representatives, March 19, 1809, by Mr. Harrison G. Otis, of Massachusetts; Mr. Nathaniel Maceon, of North Carolina, moved that the bill be rejected; the motion was lost; but a few days later, Mr. Joseph Eggleston, of Virginia, procured the postponement of the bill by a vote of sixty-four to twenty-three. It was not until 1802 that the measure became a law.

The Academy, however, had only the cold shoulder of the administration which in the mean time had come into power, and its early years were not very prosperous. The result of this policy was, that when the second war with England broke out, there were but sixty-five West Point men in the service. In the course of that war the record of the first two years shows in the army little but bad generalship, blunders, and defeats. Americans, however, learn war rapidly in the field, and the last campaigns were most creditable to our arms. In these campaigns West Point men took a conspicuous part. Of those in active service, one sixth were killed, one twelfth were wounded, and one-fifth of those who survived received one or more brevets for gallantry and meritorious conduct.

During the thirty years which followed the close of this war, the officers of the regular army were employed in fighting the Indians, a training which, although useful, was yet very incomplete. At the breaking out of the war with Mexico, five hundred graduates of the Academy were in the service, and many others re-entered it from the occupations of civil life. In this war the utility of military education was strikingly proved. In less than a year and a half our small army in Mexico won thirty battles, took forty thousand prisoners, a thousand cannon, besides an immense amount of small arms and munitions of war, ten fortified places, and the capital of the enemy, and acquired territory for the country which now yields every year a revenue equal to three times the whole cost of the contest. General Scott, himself not a West Point graduate, thus summed up the lessons of this war: "I give it as my fixed opinion that, but for our graduated cadets, the war between the United States and Mexico might, and probably would, have lasted some four or five years, within its first half more defeat than victories falling to our share."

These two brilliant campaigns gave an extravagant fame to the Military Academy, which at the breaking out of the rebellion, worked to its injury. The people expected impossibilities of it. In General Cullum's words, "the youthful graduates, who perhaps had never commanded a larger force than a company, or a battalion, were expected at once to lead vast armies of undisciplined troops through unknown morasses and tangled wildernesses to assured victory." It was inevitable that the popular expectation should be disappointed, and that West Point should thereupon be as extravagantly derided as it had been extravagantly lauded. In this reaction of public feeling, the fact that the rebel armies were led by West Point men was argued with pertinacity as an additional argument against the usefulness of the Academy.

But as the war went on West Point men steadily replaced the officers appointed from civil life in the higher commands. Men who before had had experience only in petty war, learned with wonderful facility to practise grand strategy, and successfully conduct campaigns of unparalleled difficulty and importance. Grant and Sherman reached their proper places. The annals of the last years of the war justify General Cullum's boast that the "cost of educating the whole of the succeeding graduates was not more than was saved by the military knowledge of loyal graduates on every day of the rebellion."

The West Point Academy has given the country between two and three thousand educated officers; has procured for our army a world-wide reputation; and, at the breaking out of the rebellion, it kept nearly one half its Southern graduates loyal to their country; yet it has never received, in any single year, an appropriation larger than is required to maintain a squadron of cavalry; and has not cost the country, from 1802 to the present time, a greater sum than was spent in any single week of the last years of the rebellion.

From the New York Times.

We know of no single contribution to the military history of the nation so rich in invaluable data and so essential to the future historian or student of American history as the volumes with the above title. The author, a distinguished officer of the Engineers, and lately Superintendent of the Academy, is himself an élève of the "Cherished Alma Mater," with which he has been many years immediately connected as "Instructor of Practical Engineering," and more recently as its Superintendent. Devoted to his corps, to the Academy, and to the honor of the service to which the Military Academy is so important an adjunct; admirably qualified by study of the exact sciences and of the best ancient and modern histories, and by natural and mental endowments for labors of profound research and patient investigation, the graduates of the Academy are indeed fortunate in their military biographer. For no institution in the world does there exist so full and complete a record of its officers, teachers, and graduates, as we now have for the United States Military Academy.

The execution of this task has been by no means an official duty, but was undertaken rather in payment of a debt of gratitude to the author's Alma Mater, which had bestowed upon him a valuable education and habits of usefulness.

It was, we believe, as long back as the year 1848, that the then Superintendent of the Military Academy, Capt. (now Brevet Brig.-General) Henry Brewerton, believing that a period had arrived when some formal and complete record of the services of the numerous graduates which the institution had matriculated during the many years of its existence, would be not only a convincing evidence of its usefulness, but a most valuable book of reference, adopted the idea of a work which should be not only a "Register" of the names and dates of appointment and graduation of all the graduates, but a brief record of their promotions in the army or of their occupations in civil life after graduation. The author was then Instructor of Practical Engineering at the Academy. The task was first assigned to other hands, but it soon became evident that it was an undertaking to execute which, thoroughly and fittingly, but few possessed the requisite qualifications or habits of mind, and almost naturally, we may say, it soon devolved upon him. "The Register of the Officers and Graduates of the United States Military Academy," from 1802 to 1850, was thus the germ of the present important work, and, valuable as it was, yet, as compared with the book before us, it is as the acorn to the fully developed oak.

These remarks we deem appropriate, that the reader may fully understand that these volumes are not hasty gatherings together of such notes as could be speedily laid hands on, but an ordinary life's labor of an author peculiarly qualified for his task.

That it was a herculean one may be judged from the author's own account of it in his preface.

That by such an amount of patient labor alone could such a task be fittingly accomplished, is evident from the statement, by the author, of its character and scope.

We have devoted so much space to setting forth the origin and character of the work that we can spare little to treating of the actual contents; the résumé we have just made will leave, however, no room for doubt, we think, as to its invaluable characteristics. Nowhere else can such an epitome of materials for our country's military history be found; none who would be familiar with that history should be without it, and certainly no one who has a relative or dear friend a graduate of the Military Academy, or who has been much associated with men and things connected with our military service, can well dispense with these volumes.

We cannot close this notice without calling attention to the author's triumphant vindication of the graduates and of the Academy from the charge of "disloyalty." Here by accurate numerical comparisons he proves that

"The statistics show that the West Point part of the army has been by far the most loyal branch of the public service; that nearly four fifths of its graduate officers remained faithful; that one half of those from the South stood firm by the 'Stars and Stripes'; and, in the battles for the Union, that one fifth of those engaged laid down their lives, more than one third, and probably one half, were wounded, and the survivors can point with manly pride to their services, here recorded, for the preservation of the nation.

"Can Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Union, Princeton, or any other college in the land show a higher record of patriotism and sacrifice? Assuredly not, for their Southern graduates espoused the rebel cause almost en masse. Should then these noble seminaries of learning be aspersed as nurseries of treason because they did not retain all their élèves in the Union fold?"

After showing how important an element to military success in war, and to the organization and management of the great bodies of troops suddenly called together to subdue the Rebellion, were the graduates of the Academy, and the military knowledge which the Academy has been the means of disseminating through all classes, the author exclaims:

"How insignificant is the expense of this great establishment, which has had an existence of two thirds of a century, at a total cost during that long period of usefulness not exceeding the nation's outlay for carrying on war during a single week of the closing years of the Rebellion! And since 1802, when it was created, the average annual appropriations have not been more than those for the maintenance of a squadron of cavalry."

In another place he affirms that the integrity of its graduates is proved by the fact that but two per cent. of the entire number have been cashiered or dismissed from the army, and nearly all of these for dissipation, and purely military offences.

We have said enough, we think, to give a comprehensive idea of the value of such a work, and of the thoroughness with which it has been executed.

After many years of persevering toil I present to my brother Graduates of the Military Academy this Record of their services, honorable to themselves, giving world-renown to their Alma Mater, and claiming for their country a place in the first rank of military nations. Every source of information, official and private, has been exhausted to make this work accurate and complete. Archives have been ransacked, tons of manuscripts examined, letters by thousands written, and interrogatories almost countless put wherever a hope of gleaning any information at all reliable existed. Doubtless many errors will be found, but in a work of this magnitude and character, where positive data are often unattainable, mistakes are unavoidable; but with free access to the records of the War Department and Military Academy, a voluminous correspondence with graduates and their friends, and a personal acquaintance of more than thirty years with the movements and operations of the Army, I have by untiring industry, collected and condensed in these volumes as faithful summaries of the services of the élèves of the Military Academy, as I believe any single individual could accomplish. To avoid errors as far as practicable, the état de service of each living loyal graduate was submitted to him for correction before being incorporated in this work. A large majority promptly responded, but I regret that many replied too late to change their records before being sent to the printer.

The History of the Military Academy is too large a subject to be compressed within the preface to these volumes; but I cannot forbear dwelling a little upon the value of this noble institution to the country, and the cheap defense secured to the nation through the admirable instruction there given.

The Father of his Country, in his last annual message to Congress, says: "Whatever arguments may be drawn from particular examples, superficially viewed, a thorough examination of the subject will evince that the Art of War is both comprehensive and complicated; that it demands much previous study, and that the possession of it, in its most improved and perfect state, is always of great moment to the security of a nation."

In elementary tactics, or the organizing and changing of troops of any arm from one formation to another, as from line into column or square, officers of ordinary capacity can make themselves proficient in a very few months; but a general must know much more than this before he is capable of selecting a proper base and line of operations, of directing suitable formations on the field of battle, or manœuvring his army to successfully reach a chosen objective point. "Chaque soldat Français porte, dans sa giberne, son bâton de maréchal de France," was a true saying, provided the soldier carried in his head, at the same time, the qualifications for a marshal; hence nearly all of Napoleon's greatest generals, to whom he entrusted the command of armies, were either educated in military schools or had large experience in the wars of the French Revolution. Marshals like Ney and Macdonald, so terrible on the battle-field when directed by the master-genius of the educated Emperor, were sorry failures in strategic combinations when left to their own devices, as Dennewitz and the Katsbach bear witness.

In our days, we no longer believe in what Chatham called "heaven-born generals." It is agreed that modern warfare is the offspring of science and civilization; that it has its rules and its principles, which it is necessary to thoroughly master before being worthy to command; and that it is wiser to profit by the lessons of history than to purchase experience by the blood of battle-fields. The brief span of a single life avails little in working out the great problems of science; but education supplies the piled-up aggregates of human knowledge. From the days of early Greece, which excelled in all the arts, military education has been deemed indispensable for great success in arms. It is mind, disciplined and instructed, which leads armies and builds up empires; mind, not stultified with pedantry, but developed by thought and inward will, conferring the power of discerning, analyzing, and combining means essential to an end. This culture of the soldier is to be acquired, not alone in military academies, but in that greater school, the camp and battle-field. To form the accomplished commander, the practice of campaigns must be the sequence of the lessons taught by the masters of the art. "The knowledge of grand tactics," says Napoleon, "is acquired only by experience and by the study of the history of the campaigns of all the great captains. Gustavus Adolphus, Turenne, Frederick, like Alexander, Hannibal, and Cæsar, have all acted on the same principles, of holding their forces united, being nowhere vulnerable, and throwing their masses upon important points: such are the principles which assure victory. Read again and again the campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugene, and of Frederick. Make them your models. This is the only way of becoming a great captain and mastering the secrets of the art of war. Your genius, enlightened by this study, will induce you to reject all maxims in conflict with those of these great commanders."

Genius to conceive great projects and devise extraordinary means for their accomplishment is the first requisite of a great general; but, besides this creative power, he must have knowledge and experience, which are the implements with which he works. Some eminent commanders, it is true, have had genius without great learning; but the foremost men of the world—Alexander, Cæsar, and Napoleon—were distinguished, not only as practical generals but as learned scholars. The first was instructed by Aristotle in all branches of Grecian lore, modelled himself upon the heroes of Homer, and was an annotator of the Iliad; the second was a great classical author, the master of Roman art, and the rival of Cicero in eloquence; and the third would have been famous as a philosopher had he not been an emperor. "Do you think," said Napoleon, "if I had not been general-in-chief, and the instrument of fate to a mighty nation, that I would have accepted place and dependence? No! I would have thrown myself into the study of the exact sciences. My path would have been that of Galileo and Newton; and, since I have always succeeded in my great enterprises, I should have highly distinguished myself also in my scientific labors. I should have left the memory of magnificent discoveries."

But, besides genius and knowledge, the habitude of enlarged command, which is the education of the field, is indispensable to make the great captain; to know how to organize and form the character of an army, as well as to lead it when formed. It was not intellectual superiority alone, but that confidence inspired by discipline, which enabled Miltiades, with his ten thousand Greeks, to stem the avalanche of Persia on the plains of Marathon. It was not numbers and muscle that conquered Asia, but Alexander, young in years, but old in the experience of camps, with Philip's veteran phalanxes, led by such skilled commanders as Parmenio, Antipater, Attalus, and other captains educated in war.

Hannibal was no blind Samson, removing Alpine barriers in order to inundate the plains of Italy with his Carthaginian hosts, but the learned pupil of Hamilcar, leading the war-trained bands of Carthalo, Hanno, Mutines, and Maharbal, well practised in the school of victory in Spain. Scipio, though without veteran legions, had seen the battles of Ticinus, Trebbia, and Cannæ, and probably had served under Fabius and Marcellus; but not till he had won that double victory over the armies of Syphax and Asdrubal was he—the educated commander—able to cope with the great Punic warrior on the plains of Zama. Cæsar was a student from his cradle; and, though “in him was a thousand Mariuses.” it was not till he had learned the art of war in Spain and Gaul, against barbarians, that he could conquer his distinguished rival at Pharsalia.

Knowledge and experience have been equally the elements of success with modern generals. Turenne, carefully educated, and studying war under his distinguished uncle, Maurice, required a dozen campaigns to grow from the youthful commander in Lorraine to the consummate strategist, manœuvring against Montecuculi. Gustavus, educated for the throne, and the heir of war with his powerful rivals of Poland and Russia, won his great victory of Leipsic by the enthusiasm inspired by his heroic leadership, no less than by the stern discipline of his troops. Condé, though rapidly passing from the school to the camp, and from the camp to victory, was, after the rough lessons of Merci, John de Wert and Turenne, thrice the general when vanquished at Senef, in his later career, than as the stripling victor of Rocroy. Prince Eugene, preferring Xenophon and Polybius to his breviary, deserted the Church for the camp; but with all his passion for war and numerous campaigns, he was not the finished commander till the siege of Lille and the day of Malplaquet. Marlborough had little book-lore; but from the age of sixteen he studied war in the field, and was a pupil of the great Turenne, though that education required many successive campaigns to change the Churchill of Sedgemoor into the Marlborough of Blenheim. Practice supplied his scholastic deficiencies equally as soldier or statesman. Frederick the Great, the heir to a military throne, was thoroughly educated for a soldier; but it required the mortification of Mollwitz and the teachings of his faithful Schwerin to fit him to lead his Potsdam grenadiers through that wonderful career of seven years of glory. Wellington was educated at the military school of Angiers, in France; but it was in applying the principles of war, there taught, to his India campaings, that he learned the path to success in Spain and to win the laurelled crown of Waterloo. Napoleon, the meteor that has so dazzled the world, received the best military education in France; and, though his first campaigns are the most extraordinary on the page of history, it must be remembered that he had had the previous experience of the siege of Toulon and two years' service with the Army of the Alps. But, brilliant as were Castiglione, Arcola, and Rivoli, how much were they eclipsed by the after-glories of Austerlitz, Jena, Wagram, Borodino, and the immortal campaign of 1814!

We could go on citing examples to the same effect till we had exhausted nearly the whole catalogue of distinguished commanders of ancient and modern times; but the prominent generals we have named will suffice to show that, to a natural aptitude for war, soldiers, as in all professions and crafts, must be educated to their vocation; and, to rise to the high level of a finished captain, much practice and the habitude of command are essential.

Unfortunately, the lessons, taught on almost every page of the history of war have been too often lost upon our country; and the accumulated evidence of four great wars, in which this nation has been involved, does not seem to have changed the course of our rulers

During the Revolution, having but few educated officers, we were very frequently dependent upon European soldiers of fortune, who were eagerly employed with high rank and extravagant pay. To Steuben, the disciple of the great Frederick, the Continental Army was mainly indebted for its discipline. Congress, through Dr. Franklin and Mr Deane, was compelled to ask Louis XVI for engineers; "for," said General Charles Lee, "we had not an officer in the army who knew the difference betwixt a chevaux de frise and a cabbage-garden." Though victory perched upon our standards in the beginning of the contest at Bemis' Heights, and we had the educated patriot soldier Schuyler to prepare our army for the struggle, Kosciuszko, the accomplished engineer, to plan our defenses, the impetuous and reckless daring of an Arnold to lead the assault, and the unerring aim of Morgan's riflemen to deprive the enemy of its ablest commander (Fraser), yet were we far from possessing the instruction necessary for successful war. In the school of adversity, and with the blood of thousands, Washington, though opposed to feeble generals and small numbers, had to learn more difficult lessons than those first taught him at Braddock's defeat.

Washington fully appreciated the saying "that an army of asses led by a lion is vastly superior to an army of lions led by an ass;" hence his solicitude, to the day of his death, to see established a national school for the education of officers. With good generals, he knew an effective army might be created out of the most unpromising materials; of which we have the best proof in the examples of Portuguese and Hindoos under British, and Italians under French commanders.

Through his efforts and those of the patriot statesmen of the Revolution, our Military Academy was established in 1802; but it led a languishing life, and, though war was impending, it may be said to have almost ceased to have an existence, under Dr. Eastis' feeble administration of the War Department. At the commencement of hostilities with Great Britain, there were but sixty-five graduates of the Military Academy in service, and our few regulars had scarce ever seen a battle-field. Again our armies had to meet the foe with few educated officers and but little experience in war: hence the years 1812 and 1813, excepting the sea-fights, were almost always annals of American defeats. The glorious souvenirs of Bunker Hill, Saratoga, and King's Mountain were obscured by the pusillanimous surrenders at Detroit and Niagara, the barbarous massacres at Hampton and the river Raisin, and the disgraceful failures at Chrysler's Field and La Cole Mill. During the brief and brilliant campaigns of 1814 and 1815, when our education in war was anew purchased upon unsuccessful fields of blood, the full tide of triumph flowed on almost uninterruptedly, and the "Second War of Independence" closed in a blaze of victory. In these last achievements the youthful sons of the Military Academy nobly performed their part. Of those serving in the field, one sixth laid down their lives in the struggle, one fourth were killed or wounded, and one fifth of those who survived received one or two brevets each for their distinguished gallantry in that war.

Thirty years of inercative peace followed before our next contest, but the nation had somewhat profited by its past shortcomings. The Military Academy, on the breaking out of the Mexican war, had over five hundred highly-educated graduates in service, and nearly as many more in civil life, ready to resume their swords in their country's defense. Our regular army, mostly officered by them, had acquired experience in fighting savages on our extended frontier, and had learned discipline in the swamps of Florida. Our brave volunteers, with high aptitude to form the best of soldiers, wisely sought the élèves of our national school, and tendered to them the command of their regiments and battalions. The material of battle had been prepared by skillful hands, and educated minds directed the complicate machinery of war. The consequence of this fortuitous condition of things, despite political machinations, is too well known to require to be detailed here. Suffice it to say that, in comparing this with the preceding war, the fruits of military education are most apparent. In Canada, during two and a half years, with much larger forces than the enemy, our defeats outnumbered our victories : our gains in prisoners of war were less than our losses ; our trophies were few ; and our conquests scarce extended beyond the camps we occupied. In the Mexican war, our small, but heroic army, in less than a year and a half, though opposed to the quadruple force of the enemy, won thirty victories, captured forty thousand soldiers, took a thousand cannon and an immense amount of small arms and munitions of war, carried ten fortified places and the capital of the enemy, and extended our conquests over the immense territory of Mexico and California. The gain of that war, to say nothing of national reputation, now annually pays more than thrice the total cost of the contest.

The emulator of Cortez, the veteran Scott,—one of the most experienced soldiers this nation has produced, and the consummate leader of our armies in Mexico,—says, in a letter to the commission appointed under the act of June 21, 1860, to examine into the organization, system of discipline, and course of instruction of the Military Academy : “I give it as my fixed opinion that, but for our graduated cadets, the war between the United States and Mexico might, and probably would, have lasted some four or five years, with, in its first half, more defeats than victories falling to our share ; whereas, in less than two campaigns, we conquered a great country and a peace, without the loss of a single battle or skirmish.”

The great results of the Mexican war gave the Military Academy an immense reputation, and its popularity continued till the first outbreak of the late Rebellion, which at once assumed proportions entirely incommensurate with any of our past notions or experience in war ; yet the youthful graduates of the institution, who perhaps had never commanded a larger force than a company or battalion, were expected at once to lead vast armies of undisciplined troops through unknown morasses and tangled wildernesses to assured victory. Though they quickly learned to apply the sound precepts taught at the Military Academy, yet at the beginning of the war it was hardly reasonable to expect them to successfully manœuvre colossal armies in an unexplored country, and in the presence of a brave and active enemy, who thoroughly knew the topography of every battle-field and theatre of campaign. Under these circumstances, successful leadership required large experience, as well as knowledge and genius, such as had been exhibited by scarce a score of generals since the earliest period of authentic history; for, leaving out Asiatic conquerors with their fabulous hosts, which could neither be fed nor moved in campaign, it may safely be asserted that not twenty generals, prior to the time of the Southern rebellion, had ever commanded, in a single battle-field, an army of one hundred thousand men.

These early failures disappointed the cherished hopes of the nation, and foreign adventurers and greedy demagogues, who were aspirants for high appointments in the service, seized the occasion with avidity to make the Academy a target for every kind of vituperation, particularly the unjust charge of the disloyalty of its graduates. It is, unfortunately, true that many forgot the flag under which they were educated, to follow false gods. But who were the leaders of this treason but the honored and trusted in the land, filling, or who had filled, the highest places in the government: Senators, Representatives, members of the Cabinet, foreign Ministers, Judges of United States Courts, and even those who had been elected by the people to fill the highest offices in their gift? Was it, then, a greater crime for graduates of our national Academy to forsake their country than for the highest officials in every branch of the government, executive, legislative, and judicial, who, from the seceding States, almost to a man, joined the rebel standard?

But let us examine this rebellion record a little more closely. In the executive department, four Presidents were living when Secession began. Of these, the only Southerner joined the rebels; another did the country more harm than an avowed enemy: while the others certainly were not over demonstrative in their efforts to preserve the Union. Belonging to the bench of the Supreme Court there were four Southern judges, of whom two remained loyal, one was strongly sympathetic with the South, and one joined the rebels. The Southern judges of the United States District Courts sided with their own people. Of the Senators in Congress from the seceding States but one, and of the House of Representatives but three remained loyal. Nearly all the agents of the State, Treasury, Interior, and Post-office Departments, residing in, or from the seceding States, espoused the rebel cause. Over one fourth of the officers of the Navy on the active list resigned or were dismissed in 1860-61, nearly all of whom, being Southerners, probably joined in the Rebellion. Of those appointed in the Army from civil life nearly one half, while but a little over one fifth of the West Point officers, left the service and joined in the rebellion.

With these pregnant facts before us, we would ask : was it a greater wrong in an humble graduate to forget the nation's fostering care in training him for four years at the Military Academy, than for a President to renounce his allegiance to the country which for four years had encircled his brow with the republic's crown? Was it more disreputable to forsake the flag beneath which the graduate had been reared, than to stain the revered and venerable ermine of the Supreme Bench with the Upas of Secession? Were the makers of the laws—Southern Senators and Representatives—who trampled the Constitution under foot, less guilty than graduates, for violating their vows? Strange to say, though so many of these highest officials of the land rebelled against the Union, we rarely hear Congress, the Supreme Court, the executive, and other departments of the government, stigmatized as nurseries of treason, while the Military Academy has been the butt against which every opprobrious epithet has been hurled by unscrupulous demagogues, as false to the flag and ungrateful to the nation, notwithstanding the statistics show that the West Point part of the army has been by far the most loyal branch of the public service ; that nearly four fifths of its graduate officers remained faithful ; that one half of those from the South stood firm by the stars and stripes; and, in the battles for the Union, that one fifth of those engaged laid down their lives, more than one third, and probably one half, were wounded, and the survivors can point with manly pride to their services, here recorded, for the preservation of the nation.

Can Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Union, Princeton or any other college in the land show a higher record of patriotism and sacrifice? Assuredly not: for their Southern graduates espoused the rebel cause almost en masse. Should, then, these noble seminaries of learning be aspersed as nurseries of treason because they did not retain all their élèves in the Union fold? And is it just to launch anathemas at the Military Academy which saved by the antidote of its loyal teachings one half of its southern pupils, who, from infancy to early manhood, before they entered this our truly national institution, had imbibed the poison of secession, till the virus had permeated every fibre of their hearts and brains?

That noble band of one hundred and sixty-two southern graduates, cradled and reared in state allegiance, but rescued from treason by West Point influences, bravely battled against rebellion, and no less firmly against every appeal of relative and friend to swerve them from loyalty and duty. These, with all Northern officers (save sixteen who dishonored their Alma Mater) and one hundred and fifteen graduates from civil life who rejoined the military service, fought the good fight for the Union, though their merits were often overlooked to give place to those who had not learned, as Napoleon calls it, "le métier des armes."

Much unreasonable clamor has been echoed throughout the length and breadth of the land of the enormity of graduates joining in the Rebellion because they were educated at the public expense. True the government gave them the best scientific military education, at a cost for each of from two to three thousand dollars. But, it may be asked, was this out of pure love for the individual cadets and as a charitable bounty to promising young men, or did the republic, requiring the best officers for its small standing army, act upon the principle of all communities that it was more profitable to employ educated talent to execute her high trusts than to procure cheap ignorance, to be heavily discounted in disaster and disgrace on the first shock of arms? It is not for the benefit of the Military Academy but for the nation's self that she supports and fosters that noble seminary of science and military art, which has already a thousand times repaid its cost in the success of our arms, in the diffusion of special knowledge, in the execution of great public works, and in the proverbial integrity of its graduates. The whole annual cost of the institution would not equal the losses through ignorance by a single blunder in ordnance or engineering construction, or the profits by knavery on a few corrupt contracts; and the compensation for the educated talent of the graduates of the Academy, if obtained from civil life, would exceed the pay of officers of the army by an amount far greater than the entire expenses of that institution: hence it is supported not only to secure efficiency but as a measure of economy. It might as well be argued that the nation pays high salaries to its Presidents, Judges, and Legislators as gratuities, and not for their services to the republic, as that the Military Academy is a charity school for the benefit of its élèves. The nation maintains the Military Academy exclusively for its own, and not for the graduates' interest, and the entire cost of educating the whole of the seceding graduates in money was not more than was saved by the military knowledge of its loyal graduates on every day of the rebellion, and the saving to the reputation of our arms was wholly incommensurate with any price paid for the maintenance of that nursery of soldiers.

But how insignificant is the expense of this great establishment which has had an existence of two thirds of a century, at a total cost during that long period of usefulness not exceeding the nation's outlay for carrying on war during a single week of the closing years of the Rebellion! and since 1802, when it was created, the average annual appropriations have not been more than those for the maintenance of a squadron of cavalry. Yet for this pittance in the yearly budget, this admirable institution has supplied the nation with over 2 200 accomplished officers, of which any army might well be proud; has filled every arm of the service with talent, efficiency and integrity; has materially aided in successfully conducting three great wars, extending our national domain, and preserving the Union; has perpetually pushed the wild savage from our borders, and been the pioneer of advancing civilization; has constructed and armed our fortifications, improved our harbors, lakes and rivers, defined our boundaries, surveyed and lighted our coasts, and explored the length and breadth of our land; has given to our militia and volunteers large numbers of valuable officers, and to our colleges able presidents and professors; has furnished distinguished civil engineers, who have bound our territory together with a net work of railways and canals; has supplied valuable city, state and government functionaries; has improved our workshops and the culture of the soil; has added its mite to the counting-house, the bar and the pulpit; and, through the contributions and text-books of its graduates, has greatly elevated the scientific standard of most of the educational institutions throughout our country, and even extended its influence abroad.

With such a catalogue of services of the élèves of the Military Academy; while the integrity of its graduates is proved by the fact that but about two per cent. of their entire number have been cashiered or dismissed from the army, and nearly all these for dissipation and purely military offences; and where there is so much excellence, matured for years by the thought and fostering care of so many wise and conscientious men who have shaped the Academy's destinies—it is certainly due to the institution, which has been tested in the crucible of peace and war, that our statesmen should feel that the past is a guarantee of future usefulness; that its value should be enhanced by adding materially to the number of its graduates, now limited to about one annually to every million of our people; that untried projects of military education should be discarded as schemes like to return to plague the inventors; and that this great national Academy is worthy of the country's confidence, and, as Napoleon said of the Polytechnic School, is for the Army, "le poulet aux œufs d'or."

In advocating the importance of military education and setting forth the usefulness of our great National Academy, there is no design of arrogating for its graduates any exclusive excellence as leaders of our armies, nor of detracting from the merits of those who have not enjoyed the same advantages. All honor to our patriotic and gallant volunteers who, from the bar, the farm, the counting-house, the work-shop, and every sphere of life, rushed at the sound of the first hostile gun fired in the Rebellion to their country's defense! Their self-sacrifice in giving up lucrative positions and the comforts of home for the privations of camp, their intelligence in meeting the difficult requirements of their new vocations, their endurance through long marches and weary campaigns, their steadfastness in the darkest hours of disaster, their valor on the battle-field or in the deadly assault, their moderation when victory had assured our success, and their return as peaceful citizens to a cordial submission to the laws of their preserved country, are worthy of all commendation. Doubtless none more than they felt and appreciated the great value of military education and experience as essential adjuncts to a natural genius for war in forming the great captain. Those only who know nothing of the profession of arms—

“Count wisdom as no member of the war,
Fore-stall our prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike
When fitness calls them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight;
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity;
They call this bed-work-mapp'ry, closet war:
So that the ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of its poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine;
Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide its execution.”

* The REBELLION is considered as beginning Jan. 9, 1861, when the first rebel shot was fired into the "Star of the West," bearing the United States flag, and terminating Aug. 12, 1866, the date of the President's final proclamation that all hostilities had ceased.

This List embraces only the principal engagements of the Rebellion, the many thousands of skirmishes and minor actions being omitted. Though much care has been bestowed upon its preparation, it is by no means perfect, for want of reliable information, which does not exist in published works, nor do the records of the War Department give full and entirely satisfactory data. In the classification here adopted the term Battle is applied to prolonged contests of armies or large bodies, usually not less than an army corps; Combat to a lesser battle, where a division at least was engaged; and Action for the want of a better appellation, or as a substitute for Affair, used by some military writers, is here employed to designate a minor engagement between small bodies of one or a few regiments. In the summaries of services of graduates it will be found that these terms do not always correspond to the classification in this list, which has been more recently prepared and with fuller information than was attainable when the former were written.

Civil History.—He passed his school-boy days amid less of the lights than the shadows of youth. At 16, he became head clerk of a mercantile establishment, but with little taste for day-books and ledgers other than to use their leaves for sketching. In 1821, he set himself seriously at work as a painter, and quickly acquired an excellent reputation as a copyist. Through the kind aid of friends he was enabled, in 1824, to visit Italy for three years, to study Michael Angelo, Raphael, Titian, and the other great masters of the land of art. Upon his return he assiduously devoted himself to painting in New York, till May 8, 1834, when he was appointed to succeed Charles R. Leslie, at the head of the Drawing Department at the Military Academy. By indefatigable industry, and with an ardent passion for his art, he has, besides performing the duties of his professorship, produced a large number of gems of painting, among which is his great master-piece, "The Embarkation of the Pilgrims," in the Capitol at Washington. From Dec. 13, 1830, to May 8, 1834, he was Professor of Perspective in the National Academy of Design at New York City.

DIED, July 23, 1865, AT GENEVA, N. Y. : AGED 82.*

* The Superintendent of the Military Academy, General Cullum, directed honors to be paid to Gen. SWIFT'S memory, in the following order:

"HEADQUARTERS, U. S. MILITARY ACADEMY, }
"WEST POINT, N. Y., July 30, 1865. }

"The First Graduate of the U. S. Military Academy, General JOSEPH G. SWIFT, departed this life at his residence in Geneva, N. Y., on the 23d instant, at the advanced age of nearly 82.

General SWIFT was born December 31, 1783, in Nantucket, Mas.; was graduated at the Military Academy soon after its organization; and was promoted Oct. 12, 1802, to be Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers, in which branch of service he continued through all the successive grades, till he became Colonel and Chief Engineer of the Army, July 31, 1812—during that period being chiefly engaged in the construction of fortifications on the Atlantic Coast. In the War of 1812-15, with Great Britain, after serving as Aide-de-Camp to Major General Pikeckey, he became, in 1813, the Chief Engineer in Wilkinson's campaign on the St. Lawrence, participating in the Battle of Chrysler's Field, and was subsequently, in 1813-14, Chief Engineer of the forces for the defense of New York, receiving for his 'Meritorious Services,' the brevet of Brigadier-General, Feb. 19, 1814. After the war he assumed the direct Superintendency of the Military Academy, and was its Inspector for a brief period preceding his resignation, Nov. 12, 1818. Upon leaving the Army, he, for nine years, was Surveyor of U. S. Revenue for the Port of New York, and then became a distinguished Civil Engineer, employed by the Government, for a long period, in directing harbor improvements on the Northern Lakes, and aiding in suppressing Canada Border disturbances, being, in 1841, honored by the President with a mission to the British Provinces with reference to a Treaty of Peace with Great Britain.

"Born at the close of the American Revolution, and dying at the termination of the American Rebellion, General SWIFT lived through the most momentous period of history, and was himself a prominent actor in the grand drama of our national existence. His military career began with that of the Military Academy, which he fostered in its feeble infancy, and he lived to see, in its developed maturity, the sons of his cherished ALMA MATER directing the high destinies of his country on victorious fields in Canada, Florida, Mexico, and within the wide domain of our Southern border. He now calmly sleeps, after a long and useful life of more than fourscore years, leaving this world in the blissful consciousness that he and his brother graduates of this Institution, have ably performed their allotted part in subduing the savage foe, in conquering foreign enemies, and crushing treason in our midst, and that he has left behind a regenerated fatherland of one people, with but one emblem of nationality, sacred to Liberty and the triumph of the best Government on earth.

"The personal excellence of General SWIFT can be only appreciated by those who knew and loved him, and they were ALL whom he met on his long journey of life, for he had no enemies but his country's. Amiable and sincere, spotless in integrity, staunch in friendship, liberal in charity, General SWIFT was a model gentleman, a true patriot, and Christian soldier, worthy of the imitation of all who, like him, would live honored and revered, and die universally regretted.

"As an appropriate tribute of respect from the Military Academy to his memory, there will be fired, under the direction of the Commandant of Colets, FIVEX minute guns, commencing at meridian, to-morrow, and the National flag will be displayed at half-staff from the same hour until sunset."

11....(Born Mas.).....WILLIAM GATES.†.....(Ap'd Mas.)

Military History.—Cadet of the U. S. Military Academy from Mar. 2, 1801, to Mar. 6, 1806, when he was graduated and promoted in the Army to SECOND LIEUT., REG. OF ARTILLERISTS, MAR. 6, 1806.

* The Secretary of War announced his death to the army, April 23, 1864, in the following General Order:

“Another, and among the last of the heroes of our ‘Second War of Independence,’ is gone. Bvt. Maj. General JOSEPH GILBERT TORREN, Chief of Engineers of the U. S. Army, departed this life on the 22d instant, in this city, in his seventy-sixth year.

“General TORREN was born August 23, 1788, in New Haven, Ct., and was graduated at the Military Academy in 1806, from which he was promoted to the Corps of Engineers, and, with a brief interval, from 1806 to 1808, continued in that arm of service, passing honorably through every grade until he became, in 1838, Chief Engineer of the Army. The Senate, before his death, unanimously confirmed his nomination by the President, to be ‘Major-General by brevet, for long, faithful and eminent services.’

“General TORREN’S military career of more than half a century, has been one of continued usefulness and distinguished services. In 1812, he was called to the field to assume the arduous and responsible position of Chief Engineer of the Army on the Niagara frontier, where he took a conspicuous part in the attack on Queenstown Heights; and the following year in the capture of Fort George, Upper Canada, and repulse of the British flotilla on Lake Ontario. In 1813-14, he became Chief Engineer of the forces successively commanded by Generals Wilkinson, Macomb, and Izard, participating in the attack on La Cole Mill, Lower Canada, and the battle of Plattsburg. In this brief war, General TORREN won the respect and admiration of his brother officers, and the marked approbation of the Government, which conferred upon him two brevets for his meritorious and distinguished services. On the return of peace, his high professional abilities were called into activity on the Board of Engineers, which projected our extended line of lake defenses and sea coast fortifications. These works, most of which were planned by himself, are the enduring monuments to his memory. In the war with Mexico, General Scott summoned his early companion-in-arms to him in the siege of Vera Cruz, where, for his ‘gallant and meritorious conduct,’ General TORREN was brevetted a Brig.-General. For the past twenty-six years, he has been at the head of the Engineer Department, administering with untiring devotion, spotless integrity, and signal ability, the varied duties, the financial responsibilities, and the professional labors of that arm of service so essential to our national defense.

“In addition to General TORREN’S multiplied military avocations, he was an active member of the Light House Board, from its organization in 1852; a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, from its establishment by Congress, in 1816; a Corporator of the National Academy of Sciences, created in 1863; one of the Harbor Commissioners for the cities of New York and Boston; and a member of many scientific associations.

“Distinguished for urbanity of manner, genial social qualities, and that great moral excellence which adorns the Christian soldier and gentleman, he has left behind an exalted reputation worthy of the emulation of his brother officers, and which his surviving children may well regard as a priceless legacy.

“As a tribute to his memory, the officers of the Corps of Engineers and Military Academy will wear the prescribed badge of mourning for thirty days, and the day after the reception of this order at the Military Academy half-hour guns will be fired from sunrise to sunset, and the national flag be displayed at half-staff.

Senate, or compatible with the public interests; for it would, very possibly, imply the necessity of ulterior proceedings not contemplated in the petition, and which it would be manifestly improper to originate on this wise, or from this committee at all. As far, however, as the committee may be justified in pursuing the course desired, they will proceed very cheerfully.

"The career of the petitioner in the Army of the United States, during a long period of nearly forty years, is a matter of history that may justly excite the pride and admiration of every American citizen. Brave in battle, he presided, for a long time, with distinguished honor and ability, at the head of one of the most difficult and arduous bureaus of the military department, and has left to the country lasting monuments of his skill and science in the construction of various magnificent fortifications, both to exhibit her strength and to insure her safety.

"While thus honorably and usefully employed in the public service for so many years, he was constantly confided in by his country, and never abused her confidence in the disbursement of immense sums of money, and lived honored and respected by all classes of men, with no taint of suspicion attaching to his name.

"With a character so high to sustain him, the charge of malfeasance in office should be received with great caution by the people, and rigidly scrutinized by Congress, and no unjust influence of any nature whatsoever, should be permitted to prevail in his case; but if, unfortunately, such influences do obtain ground, then it is obviously the imperative duty of Congress to remove them, for no higher duty devolves upon the federal legislature than the protection of the honor of its military officers, of which it is necessarily, to a very great extent, the chief custodian.

"In the attainment of this object no obstacle whatever should be allowed to interpose. Wherein legislation is deficient, it should be supplied, and all bars of rules and regulations of the service should be removed, for nothing can be so dear to the American officer as his honor, and nothing should be more assiduously guarded by the American people than that, for the honor of the soldiers of the Republic is in no small measure the life and spirit of enlightened freedom. With these brief general observations, the committee will as briefly revert to the case of the petitioner.

"The case of General Charles Gratiot, who was the Chief of the Corps of Engineers in the Army of the United States, has been so elaborately discussed in every circle, and so fully reported upon to Congress, that the history of the whole case is familiar to every one.

"The alleged grievance, which constitutes the cause of his dissatisfaction, was the summary dismissal of the petitioner from the army, in the year 1838, by the President of the United States—first, upon the plea that the power thus exercised was arbitrary, and contrary to the true meaning and intent of the act of Congress conveying it; and secondly, that a defalcation in the accounts of the petitioner, which was the cause assigned for the removal, did not and never did exist in truth.

"In support of his first plea, the petitioner exhibits a mass of testimony, which is certainly entitled to be very calmly weighed and measured; and among the same is the opinion of the General Commanding in Chief, upon a parallel case, and which no authority can be higher.

"In support of the second plea, he denies totally the truth of the charge of defalcation, and contends that he is not, and never was indebted to the United States for moneys misused by him, and that a just and legal adjustment of his accounts will bring the United States in debt to him; that the withholding of the funds, upon the demand of the Secretary of War, was a measure of self-defence, justified by the circumstances of the case, and that he was then and is now prepared for an equitable settlement, which is his demand and desire.

"It seems to the committee that both of the pleas are reasonable, and should receive attention, urged as they are, with the earnestness of conscious rectitude, by a gallant soldier, who has acquired a right to be heard from the blood he has spilled in battle.

"Further than this the Committee regret that they cannot go, as it is not in their power to afford an adequate remedy by recommending the passage of any law for the relief of the petitioners, and they therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject."

Amidst these charges, and near the close of the contest, we lost a flint piece, by the fall of the officer who was serving it, with the same coolness as if he had been at a parade or review; this was Lieutenant SMITH, of the Light Artillery, who, in point of merit, stood at the head of his grade."

* General Halleck, commanding the Division of the Pacific, in directing military honors to be paid to his memory, says:

"General De Russy was many years Superintendent of the Military Academy, often served as a member of the Board of Engineers, and was several times Acting Chief Engineer of the Army. At the time of his death he was in charge of the fortifications on the Pacific Coast. He was the oldest graduate of the Military Academy in active service, and one of the last of the heroes of the War of 1812.

"Of great kindness of heart, and possessing most urbane and polished manners, he was endeared to a large circle of friends, and the surviving graduates of the Military Academy who were educated under his superintendence, will cherish his memory as that of the kindest of fathers. By his strict integrity in the expenditure of many millions of public money, his faithful discharge of every duty of office and of life, and his unsullied honor, he has left an example most worthy of imitation."

* General Hitchcock, who passed over the battle ground, Feb. 22, 1836, reports: "Along the north and west faces of the triangular breastwork, formed by felled trees, were about thirty bodies, mere skeletons, although much of the clothing was left upon them. They were lying, almost every one of them, in precisely the position they must have occupied during the fight—their heads next to the logs over which they had delivered their fire, and their bodies stretched with striking regularity, parallel to each other. They had evidently been shot dead at their posts, and the Indians had not disturbed them, except by taking the scalps of most of them. * * * The advanced guard, doubtless, fell during the first attack. It was during a cessation of fire, that the little band still remaining, about thirty in number, threw up the triangular breastwork, which, from the haste with which it was constructed, was necessarily defective, and could not protect the men in the second attack."

The action lasted from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. The U. S. troops amounted to 108, and the savage foe to 800 Seminole Indians, and 100 negroes. While a man could load a musket, the firing was continued.—Captain GARDINER, next to the last surviving officer, fell, pierced by five or six shots, his mortal wound being in the breast.

A beautiful monument, of white Italian marble, was erected at West Point, to "DADE AND HIS COMMAND."

* These Works are designed to show that the genuine Alchemists were religious philosophers, writing in Symbolism,—that the Philosopher's Stone was a Symbol of Truth; and that Swedenborg was properly a Hermetic philosopher,—that is, a Moral and Spiritual philosopher, who wrote in Symbolism.

† The object is to show that the Gospels are Symbolical books, written by members of a secret society, of the Jews (the Essenes), who recognized a certain spiritual sense, underlying the letter of the Hebrew sacred law; Christ is the Law personified; the LAW IN ITS SPIRIT, is the Son of God; and, as a writing, the son of man.—(See Philo on the Contemplative Life.)

‡ The object is to show that the Sonnets were not addressed to a person, but to Nature, as double Spirit and Matter, called the Master-Mistress, or Love of the Poet (vide Sonnet 20).

|| The object is to show that Colin Clouts is a poetic and figurative description of the progress of a Life under the guidance of the Gospel Spirit of Truth, represented by the figure of a "Strange Shepherd," &c

*This system of Rifle Ordnance was first introduced into actual service at the Battle of Bull Run, Va., July 21, 1861. Throughout the Rebellion of 1861-66 of the Seceding States, these guns have been most extensively and successfully used by both Army and Navy, and were conspicuously serviceable in almost the closing operations of the war, before Mobile. The calibres of these guns are now made from 19 to 300 pounds. In General Gilmore's operations against Fort Sumter and Charleston, S. C., in 1863-64, one of these guns, a 30-caliber, was fired from Cummins's Point 4,606 times before bursting, and generally at 490 elevation, with charges of 33½ pounds. Of these rounds, 4,253 reached the City of Charleston, a distance not less than four miles. This is, perhaps, the most noted instance of endurance on record.

* At a meeting of the Assistants of the Coast Survey, Feb. 18, 1867, the following Resolution was adopted, “as a tribute to the memory of their respected and honored Chief, and beloved and valued friend:”

“That, in the death of Professor ALEXANDER DALLAS BACHE, Superintendent of the United States Coast Survey, the country has lost an eminent and faithful public servant, science its highest representative in America, and the Coast Survey its wise, prudent, and energetic Chief, under whose careful administration and guardianship it has attained and maintained its present vigorous existence.”

The Secretary of the Treasury announced his death in the following order, of Feb. 19, 1867 :

“TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 19, 1867.

“In the death of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, PROFESSOR BACHE, the Department mourns the loss of one of its most valuable and most highly cherished officers. His decease occurred at Newport, R. I., on the 17th inst., in his sixty-first year.

“No man within the present generation was more widely known in the walks of practical science; none has been so closely identified with collateral service in the various public departments.

“ALEXANDER DALLAS BACHE was born at Philadelphia, in April, 1806. He was graduated at the Military Academy in 1825, and there remained a year as Assistant Professor. Subsequently, having resigned from the Corps of Engineers, he filled, at intervals, until the year 1843, an important chair in the University of Pennsylvania.

“Within the same period he was, during five years, President of Girard College, and matured the system of education adopted for the Philadelphia High School, yielding to that object time for examining the principles of systematic education in Europe.

“His devotion to practical science, and his abilities as an administrative officer being well known, Professor Bache was appointed, in December, 1843, to the vacant post of Superintendent of the Coast Survey. Under his direction, that great national work has been eminent, no less for its abundant results than for its high scientific character, which has won the approbation of the leading learned bodies of the world, among whom his name has long been held in honor. He possessed by nature the qualities most conducive to success in the management of widely extended public interests. Invariably mild and forbearing towards those serving under his direction, his unrenitting energies and his untiring patience were as invariably given to the accomplishment of the service in view.

“His sympathy with the efforts of others, and readiness to give credit for their exertions, secured a cordial spirit of co-operation. Sagacity, perfect freedom from bias, and constant activity within the sphere of his public duties, strongly marked his relations with this Department.

“He was a member of the Light-house Board, and participated in its organization; a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution; and ever the valued associate of leading men to whom are committed questions in regard to matters of public utility. His advice was eagerly sought in the determination of many local and general facilities to further the interests of commerce and navigation.

“That the deceased Superintendent had become illustrious in America and in Europe is due to the steady devotion of his great talents to the service of the people.

“His general disposition attracted the love of associates and of subordinates; his wisdom commanded their respect. He leaves us a name of unsullied purity, and a memory that adds lustre to the many public records upon which it is borne.

“As a tribute to his memory, the Coast Survey Office will be draped in black, and will be closed on the day of the funeral.

“HUGH McCULLOCH, Secretary of the Treasury.”

* General Hitchcock, who passed over the battle-ground, Feb. 22, 1836, reports: “Along the north and west faces of the triangular breastwork formed by felled trees, were about thirty bodies, mere skeletons, although much of the clothing was left upon them. They were lying, almost every one of them, in precisely the position they must have occupied during the fight—their heads next to the logs over which they delivered their fire, and their bodies stretched with striking regularity, parallel to each other. They had evidently been shot dead at their posts, and the Indians had not disturbed them, except by taking the scalps of most of them. * * * The advance guard, doubtless, fell during the first attack. It was during a cessation of fire that the little band still remaining—about thirty in number—threw up the triangular breastwork, which, from the haste with which it was constructed, was necessarily defective and could not protect the men on the second attack.

The action lasted from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. The United States troops amounted to one hundred and eight, and the savage foe to eight hundred Seminole Indians, and one hundred negroes. While a man could load a musket the firing was continued. When all the officers, except Lieut. BASINGER, had fallen, he said: “Now, my boys, let us do the best we can: I am the only officer left,” upon which the firing recommenced. About half-past two o'clock he was brought down by a rifle-shot in the thighs, and he was afterwards cruelly massacred by a negro.

A beautiful monument, of white Italian marble was erected at West Point, to “DADE AND HIS COMMAND.”

* General Hitchcock, who passed over the battle-ground, Feb. 22, 1836, reports: "Along the north and west faces of the triangular breastwork formed by felled trees, were about thirty bodies, mere skeletons, although much of the clothing was left upon them. They were lying, almost every one of them, in precisely the position they must have occupied during the fight—their heads next to the logs over which they had delivered their fire, and their bodies stretched with striking regularity, parallel to each other. They had evidently been shot dead at their posts, and the Indians had not disturbed them, except by taking the scalps of most of them. * * * * The advance guard, doubtless, fell during the first attack. It was during a cessation of fire that the little band still remaining—about thirty in number—threw up the triangular breastwork, which, from the haste with which it was constructed, was necessarily defective and could not protect the men on the second attack."

The action lasted from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. The United States troops amounted to one hundred and eight, and the savage force to eight hundred Seminole Indians, and one hundred negroes. Lieut. MUDGE fell on the first fire.

A beautiful monument, of white Italian marble, was erected at West Point, to "DADE AND HIS COMMAND."

KILLED, * DEC. 28, 1835: AGED 24.

* General Hitchcock, who passed over the battle-ground, Feb. 22, 1836, reports: "Along the north and west faces of the triangular breastwork formed by felled trees, were about thirty bodies, mere skeletons, although much of the clothing was left upon them. They were lying, almost every one of them, in precisely the position they must have occupied during the fight—their heads next to the logs over which they had delivered their fire, and their bodies stretched with striking regularity, parallel to each other. They had evidently been shot dead at their posts, and the Indians had not disturbed them, except by taking the scalps of most of them. * * * The advance guard, doubtless, fell during the first attack. It was during a cessation of fire that the little band still remaining—about thirty in number—threw up the triangular breastwork, which, from the haste with which it was constructed, was necessarily defective and could not protect the men on the second attack."

The action lasted from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. The United States troops amounted to one hundred and eight, and the savage foe to eight hundred Seminole Indians, and one hundred negroes. Lieut. HENDERSON fell, and Lieut. KEAIS was disabled by having his arms broken on the first fire. The latter "got one of the men to tie both arms with a handkerchief, and was placed against a tree, where he was tomahawked by the negroes."
